October 7, 2005. Warden Message Issued in Kuala Lumpur

SOURCE: Air Security International

On 7 October 2005, the U.S. Embassy in Kuala Lumpur issued the following Warden Message: The U.S. Embassy in Kuala Lumpur is closely monitoring the current outbreak of Dengue fever. The Government of Malaysia announced a 'high alert' for the outbreak of Dengue fever on 29 September. Between 1 January and 24 September, there were 27,569 reported dengue cases, with 70 reported fatalities. During the same period last year, 21,786 cases and 68 deaths were reported.

Dengue is carried by the Aedes Mosquito. Unlike the Malaria mosquito the Aedes does not travel far from its breeding area. It thrives and multiplies in stagnant water pools.

There are no vaccines or medications for Dengue fever. Symptoms range a great deal from mild flu-like symptoms, with fever, headache, body aches and frequently a rash (Dengue Fever) in most cases, to sustained high fever and hemorrhaging (Dengue Hemorrhagic Fever) in some cases.

Prevention is the best defense against Dengue fever. Because the number of Dengue cases has significantly exceeded expected levels, and due to the fact that we are just now entering the "rainy season," we recommend that you take measures to prevent the presence of the Aedes Mosquito around your house or building.

It is very important to do a 'walk around' every one to two days and ensure that there are no areas with stagnant water. Examples of such areas include: plates under flowerpots, drainage trenches that are not draining for various reasons, and low areas in pavement or sidewalks.

Experts debate the effectiveness of spraying to control Dengue. If you go outside, especially at dawn or dusk, when the mosquito is thought to be most active, use DEET or another effective insect repellent.

Crime Threat: High (St. Petersburg)

Country

The presidency of Vladimir Putin, a former KGB agent, has brought stability and fear both domestically and internationally, including the standing insurgency in Chechnya. His authority over the financial oligarchs and competition from the United Russia Party, allies of Putin, swept the 2004 Presidential elections with more than 70% of the vote. Both elections did not meet international standards for control over some of the more independent media outlets completely, and restricting content for others. Putin is far more pro-Western than his predecessor, and has regained influence to its own benefit.

Security Situation
The main security concern for visitors is the high crime rate, much of it directed at foreigners. Organized criminal activity is also a concern but more from collateral exposure to related violent incidents than deliberate targeting. A high rate of corruption is prevalent in almost all elements of business and government in the city. The political threat from terrorism has not penetrated the St. Petersburg area so far and the security presence in St. Petersburg, like Moscow, is already very high.

Crime
St. Petersburg's crime rate is generally higher than in other large European cities under normal circumstances. However, economic difficulties have propagated a significant upsurge in general crime, even when compared to other Russian cities, and violent incidents are becoming more common. Foreigners have been increasingly affected by crime. The most common crimes perpetrated against foreigners are armed robbery and pickpocketing; however, visitors have been physically assaulted.

Organized Crime
The Russian Mafia, which is especially powerful in St. Petersburg, has infiltrated all sectors of society. The Mafia is primarily involved in trafficking and extortion. All entertainment venues, casinos, restaurants and night clubs are owned and/or managed by members from these organized criminal syndicates. As such, the Mafia is involved in virtually the entire city's economy, which as already noted, is very corrupt.

Fire Safety
Select a hotel room between the second and seventh floors, as a higher floor may be out of reach of fire equipment. In case of fire, do not use the elevators. Be able to find the fire escapes in the dark.

Communications
Domestic and international telephone service are adequate in the major cities, but less reliable in more rural areas.

Cultural Tips
Russians are very family-oriented and still fairly traditional in their belief structures. Most Russians do not speak any English, with the only constant exception being some staff in the major hotels. Casual conversations regarding Russia's economic and political stability should be avoided. While conversing with Russians, it is proper to maintain direct eye contact. Looking away is considered rude and/or suspicious. Appropriate business-related gifts for Russians include fine books, chocolates, desk accessories, tokens from your country, or an item with your company logo. High-quality alcohol is always deemed appropriate.
